

On Campus

Remembering September 11: A Campus View

By

Shawn Choy

|

Fall 2006

I carried my camera almost constantly during my time as photography editor of the Spectator, always ready to capture a slice of campus life. The morning of September 11, as I sat watching television images of thick black smoke billowing from the Twin Towers, I could think of only one place to go.

When I arrived at the Spectator newsroom, I found that most of my fellow editors were already there. Being journalists and documenting the campus angle of the story was our way of groping for purpose, and that sense of purpose helped us cope with our shock and sadness.

Throughout the day, I recorded images of other members of the University community finding their own sense of purpose. Faith-based groups congregated on College Walk to pray for the victims of the attack. Others students lined up to donate blood, overwhelming local blood banks. Still others gathered in smaller groups to try to comprehend the awful thing that had happened.

I ended the day — without my camera — at an impromptu candlelight vigil. As I sat on the Low Library steps amidst a gathering of students and faculty, I finally let the full emotion of the tragedy wash over me.

I will always remember September 11 as my worst day at Columbia, but I will also remember it as a day in which the University community pulled together to recognize the common humanity that united us as Columbians, as New Yorkers, and as Americans.

Shawn Choy '03CC was photography editor of the Columbia Daily Spectator in 2001.

Read more from Shawn Choy

Guide to school abbreviations

TAKE THE COLUMBIA
ALL-ALUMNI SURVEY

Complete the survey
by June 5.

50 randomly selected
survey participants will receive a
Columbia sweatshirt!

Shape the alumni experience.

alumni.columbia.edu/survey2026

 COLUMBIA UNIVERSITY IN THE CITY OF NEW YORK

The graphic is a promotional poster for the Columbia University All-Alumni Survey 2026. It features a dark blue background with white text. The main title is 'TAKE THE COLUMBIA ALL-ALUMNI SURVEY'. Below the title, there are three callout boxes: one on the right says 'Complete the survey by June 5.', one on the left says '50 randomly selected survey participants will receive a Columbia sweatshirt!', and one in the center says 'Shape the alumni experience.'. At the bottom, there is a dark blue bar with the URL 'alumni.columbia.edu/survey2026' in white. Below the URL is the Columbia University logo, which consists of a small crown icon followed by the text 'COLUMBIA UNIVERSITY IN THE CITY OF NEW YORK'.

All categories >

Read more from Shawn Choy