

The Worst Moment of His Life Became a Work of Art

By Rebecca Shapiro
|
Winter 2020-21

Left: Author Spencer Bailey being carried to safety after a 1989 plane crash (Gary Anderson/Sioux City Journal/ Zumapress.com). Right: A bronze statue based on the same photograph, Sioux City, Iowa (Spencer Bailey).

When Spencer Bailey '10JRN was three years old, in 1989, he was in a plane crash that killed his mother and 111 other people. The next day, a photograph of a National Guard officer carrying the young Bailey to safety appeared in newspapers and on televisions across the country. Four years later, that image was further immortalized — in the form of a six-foot-tall bronze statue outside of Sioux City, Iowa, the site of the crash.

National Memorial for Peace and Justice, Montgomery, Alabama. (© Alan Ricks/MASS Design Group)

Now a journalist who writes about architecture, art, and design, Bailey lends a unique perspective to the purpose and power of contemporary memorials in his new book In Memory Of. He shares striking images of iconic monuments, from Maya Lin's Vietnam Veterans Memorial to the much newer National Memorial for Peace and Justice in Montgomery, Alabama, and writes thoughtfully about our "physical acts of memory," acknowledging that each structure has personal grief, loss, and hope attached to it.

"Seeing myself in a statue remains a strange, out-of-body feeling," he writes, "despite my being able to look at — and think about — that memorial and every memorial within a much larger context."

This article appears in the Winter 2020-21 print issue of Columbia Magazine with the title "The Memory Makers."

Read more from Rebecca Shapiro

Guide to school abbreviations

TAKE THE COLUMBIA
ALL-ALUMNI
SURVEY

Complete the survey
by June 5.

50 randomly selected
survey participants will receive a
Columbia sweatshirt!

Shape the alumni experience.

alumni.columbia.edu/survey2026

 COLUMBIA UNIVERSITY IN THE CITY OF NEW YORK

The graphic is a promotional poster for the Columbia All-Alumni Survey 2026. It features a dark blue background with white text. The main title is 'TAKE THE COLUMBIA ALL-ALUMNI SURVEY'. Below the title, there are three callout boxes: one on the right saying 'Complete the survey by June 5.', one on the left saying '50 randomly selected survey participants will receive a Columbia sweatshirt!', and one on the right saying 'Shape the alumni experience.'. At the bottom, there is a dark blue bar with the URL 'alumni.columbia.edu/survey2026' in white. Below the URL is the Columbia University logo, which consists of a small crown icon followed by the text 'COLUMBIA UNIVERSITY IN THE CITY OF NEW YORK'.

All categories >

Read more from Rebecca Shapiro