15 New Views of Vintage Columbia

Postcard collector Brewster Moseley ’76TC shares some of his favorite campus scenes.

Spring/Summer 2021

Back in college, Brewster Moseley ’76TC began exchanging postcards with a friend. Their running gag was to send the weirdest, funniest cards they could find. Today, Moseley, a writer and photographer living in Idaho, is a deltiologist — a collector of postcards. Dominating his collection are vintage Columbia cards from the late 1800s to the mid-1940s. “While not exaggerated or humorous,” Moseley says, “these cards certainly evoke — for me at least — beautiful, nostalgic memories.”

Low Library
Butler Library (previously "South Hall")
The athletic field
Furnald Hall and School of Journalism, Columbia University, N. Y. City.
A tennis court on campus
Aerial views
COLUMBIA UNIVERSITY BUILDING. NEW YORK.
Looking east
The trolley along Broadway
Teachers College
This article appears in the Spring/Summer 2021 print edition of Columbia Magazine with the title "Postcards from the Heights." Images courtesy of Brewster Moseley.

All categories  >