15 New Views of Vintage Columbia

Postcard collector Brewster Moseley ’76TC shares some of his favorite campus scenes.

Spring/Summer 2021

Back in college, Brewster Moseley ’76TC began exchanging postcards with a friend. Their running gag was to send the weirdest, funniest cards they could find. Today, Moseley, a writer and photographer living in Idaho, is a deltiologist — a collector of postcards. Dominating his collection are vintage Columbia cards from the late 1800s to the mid-1940s. “While not exaggerated or humorous,” Moseley says, “these cards certainly evoke — for me at least — beautiful, nostalgic memories.”
Butler Library (previously "South Hall")
The athletic field
COLUMBIA UNIVERSITY, NEW YORK CITY.
A tennis court on campus
Aerial views
COLUMBIA UNIVERSITY BUILDING. NEW YORK.
Looking east
Chapel East, Philosophy and Kent Halls, Columbia University, New York City.
The trolley along Broadway
Teachers College
This article appears in the Spring/Summer 2021 print edition of Columbia Magazine with the title "Postcards from the Heights." Images courtesy of Brewster Moseley.

All categories  >