

Poem: "Light Snow"

By Jeffrey Harrison '80CC

Winter 2011-12

Just enough snow fell last night to emphasize what's there — nothing fanciful, no octopi on the spruce boughs or fungal protuberances in the garden — just enough to highlight the cables swooping in unison above the road and to italicize the branches of the trees out to their twiggy extremities so that their complex articulations might be legible. But what is it I want to read in them? Just enough to see what's there a little more clearly?

Or a little more than that? I don't know, but what I see next is the snow being blown from the trees in sudden glittering puffs, one after another of these literal illuminations that swirl down and vanish, dazzling, ungraspable.

Jeffrey Harrison '80CC is the author of five books of poetry, including The Names of Things: New and Selected Poems and Incomplete Knowledge.

TAKE THE COLUMBIA ALL-ALUMNI SURVEY

Complete the survey
by June 5.

50 randomly selected
survey participants
will receive a Columbia sweatshirt!

Shape the alumni
experience.

alumni.columbia.edu/survey2026

 COLUMBIA UNIVERSITY
IN THE CITY OF NEW YORK

All categories >