Acclaimed filmmaker Jim Jarmusch ’75CC has amassed a cult following for his quirky, contemplative independent movies, including Stranger Than Paradise, Broken Flowers, and The Dead Don’t Die. But he is also a prolific visual artist and recently unveiled a collection of collages with the apt, deadpan title Some Collages. Relying heavily on clippings from old newspapers — a striking contrast to our constant digital newsfeed — Jarmusch superimposes famous faces and crosses time periods in eerie, often very funny ways. Patty Hearst’s mug shots get Edwardian bodies, Stanley Kubrick becomes a golfer, and one of Andy Warhol’s iconic Brillo boxes replaces a man’s head. Like a sign on a passing taxi, the images are familiar, but only fleetingly.
